Tips to Make your Book Review Outstanding

Start with a summary - Start your book review with the summary of the book. It is a good way to start a review as it provides context to the review. The important thing to keep in mind here is to not go into the details. Your summary should be short and precise. Your readers are looking for a review of a writer and not a summary. The internet is full of summaries.

Highlight the most important aspect - for your ease, divide the aspects of the book into themes, characters, plot, and world-building. What a writer can do is, allocate each paragraph to these aspects and give a suitable amount of details.

Also, present how well the author has presented them and what interests you the most in the book.

Include quotations - Quotations are best to give examples. If you are talking about the character's personality, quote something of his that explicitly explain his personality to the readers.

Make sure you do not add long quotes or so many quotes in your review. A book review is short in length and you will not want the quotes to occupy most of the space in your review.

Write a compelling conclusion - Everything is good that has a good ending. To make your book review strong and effective write a summary of the main points. Share your views and opinions about how the author conveyed the message and whether he is successful in doing it or not.

Look for similar books - Another trick to make your book review good is to find books that are of similar genre and theme. Give examples and relate them to other mainstream works.
